SUMMER 2014

Fitting in

Scarlett and London Capps with Turnstone day-care teacher Jessie Crothers.

Twins London and Scarlett have found a place of their own at Turnstone.

Having a blended family that includes seven kids ages 4 to 16 keeps Jen and Phil Bredemeyer on the go. In addition to all the responsibilities that come with raising a house full of kids, Jen and Phil both work full time to provide for their crew. That means they often need quality day care, especially for their twin daughters, London and Scarlett, who require a special level of TLC. The Bredemeyers have found quality care—and much more—at Turnstone.

London and Scarlett, who'll be 7 years old in September, have leukodystrophy, which is a group of disorders caused by the imperfect development of the myelin sheath, the covering that insulates nerve fibers in the central nervous system. The girls also have cortical visual impairment and are legally blind.

"What London and Scarlett have is similar to cerebral palsy," Jen says. "They don't walk—although they sometimes try to do the best they can—and they don't talk. They can see, but it's sort of like looking through swiss cheese. Their vision has holes in it."

London and Scarlett became very ill about 10 days after they were born, and their survival was in doubt. After they pulled through, doctors weren't certain that the girls had disabilities until they were about 9 months old. "Of course, I knew something wasn't right long before that," Jen says. "The doctors have never been able to tell us if London and Scarlett's disabilities are genetic or caused by the illness shortly after they were born.

"If you think of most people's brains as speedboats, London and Scarlett's brains are like rowboats," Jen adds. "If you tell them to do something, they will, but it might be five minutes later. We're working on teaching them signs because they'll never be able to communicate verbally. They'll always need assistance of some sort—they'll never be independent. And they face some surgeries in the future."

With their twins facing so many challenges, Jen and Phil needed to find a special place where the girls could receive therapy and care during working hours. Turnstone is such a place. London and Scarlett began coming to Turnstone for physical, occupational, and speech therapies when they were 3 years old. Now the girls also spend a portion of most weekdays at the center.

Monday through Friday, Scarlett and London attend Turnstone's before- and after-school child care. During the day, they attend Holland Elementary where they are in special education.

"London and Scarlett love it at Turnstone—it's their place—and they're really upset when they have to come home," Jen says. "They just like being part of the crowd and fitting in, which is easy at Turnstone because the day care is for kids of all abilities. They also like the routine. They know what to expect.

"Turnstone has been a Godsend for us," Jen says. "London and Scarlett have benefited from the therapy, and the quality day care lets us go to work without worries. It's great to have someone you can trust. When your kids can't communicate, and you leave them in someone else's care, you're never sure what might be going on. I have absolute trust in Turnstone, and I know they have our girls' best interest at heart.

"Turnstone helps people grow and become independent," Jen says. "We love them—they're the best from the rest. Everyone is there to help. And they take an interest in us, our family. It's not like we're just there to drop kids off for day care." 🌟

STANDING TALL

On June 13, we broke ground for our new field house, the centerpiece of our 120,000-square-foot expansion aimed at creating “The Turnstone of Tomorrow.” A big part of this expansion is to answer the ever-growing call for opportunities in adaptive sports and recreation, aquatics, and health and fitness. Another big goal is to become a national Paralympic training center.

We had a very special guest on hand for the groundbreaking—Amy Purdy. You may have seen Amy on TV. She’s been on Dancing with the Stars, The Amazing Race, and part of a one-hour special about Olympians. She’s been in movies and in videos and featured in the TED series. In Sochi, Russia, this winter, Amy won a bronze medal in snowboarding at the 2014 Paralympic Games.

Sounds like Amy’s pretty accomplished, doesn’t it? You don’t know the half of it. Amy was 19 years old when she contracted bacterial meningitis. With just a 2-percent chance of survival, she lost both kidneys and her spleen, and both of her legs were amputated below the knee. But she persevered, and just a year after receiving leg prosthetics, Amy finished third in a snowboarding event.

Amy’s success snowballed after she received a grant from the Challenged Athletes Foundation that enabled her to go on to further competitions and eventually become part of the U.S. Paralympic team competing in Sochi, where she took the bronze for Team USA.

Amy has also become a tireless advocate for people with disabilities and co-founded Adaptive Action Sports, part of Disabled Sports USA. A nonprofit organization, Adaptive Action Sports helps people with disabilities who want to participate in sports such as skateboarding, surfing, and snowboarding. Amy has brought a great deal of attention to the importance of adaptive sports in helping people move forward.

Amy spoke with several of our clients and athletes during her visit. She has a wonderful enthusiasm for life and is the epitome of those who overcome life’s challenges—something our clients do every day.

In April, a lot of attention was paid to the one-year anniversary of the Boston Marathon bombing. The number of people who were seriously injured in the bombing underscores how any one of us may have to learn to live with a disability at any point in our lives. But while our physical bodies can change at any time, it’s what’s inside us that drives us to push ourselves to greater heights, even if that’s just to go to work, to school—or just out to see a movie.

We are all driven to complete this expansion, which will provide limitless benefits to people with disabilities for years to come. However, we still need your help. We’ve raised $10 million of the more than $14 million needed.

Amy jokes that she can be as tall—or as short—as she wants now depending on the length of her prosthetic legs. She stands pretty tall in our book. Please stand tall with Amy and all people with disabilities striving to overcome life’s challenges. Call (260) 483-2100 to learn what you can do to help.
